

Duchess of Cambridge topless photos published in French magazine: Palace to sue

The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge recently were saddened by the "grotesque and unjustifiable invasion of privacy" by a French magazine which published topless photos of Kate. The French magazine 'Closer' printed the pictures of the Duchess, taken during their private holiday in France. The Royals immediately decided to take legal action over the case. The editor of 'Closer' hit back saying the couple were "visible from the street" and the images are "not in the least bit shocking". Prince William has always been absolutely determined to protect the privacy of his wife.

News of the photos broke while the royal couple were on a visit to Malaysia in the Far East. Prince William had a look of 'thunder on his face' as the couple departed Kuala Lumpur for Sabah in north Borneo on the next stop of their nine day tour of South East Asia.

'Closer' editor Laurence Pieau: "These photos are not in the least bit shocking. They show a young woman sunbathing topless, like millions of women you see on beaches". She described the reaction as "a little disproportionate". She added, "They (the couple) are on the terrace of a mansion in the South of France, which is not far from a road along which cars pass without any problem. They are visible from the street."

The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge's lawyers were due in court in Paris (Monday) to try to restrict publication of the photos. This may not be so easy, as the photos have already been printed in the Irish edition of the Daily Star and Italian magazine 'Chi'. The latter is Closer's sister magazine. 'Closer' and 'Chi' are owned by Silvio Berlusconi's Mondadori Media Group. The topless photos are also on various international websites.

Lawyers will ask the French court to bring criminal charges against the French photographer responsible. Under French law the photos represent an undisputed breach of privacy. An injunction would lead to the magazine being withdrawn from the shelves immediately, but this only relates to the distribution of the photos in France.

The Duke and Duchess are now in the Solomon Islands in the South Pacific, representing the Queen as part of her Diamond Jubilee tour of South East Asia and the South Pacific.

DISCUSSION

Student A questions

- 1) Did the headline make you want to read the article?
- 2) Are you surprised to learn it was a French female magazine editor that chose to print these photos?
- 3) Can the British Royal Family really censor these photos in the internet world we live in today?
- 4) Are these photos 'shocking'?
- 5) Why do you think the Irish Daily Star is now closing down?
- 6) What has been the reaction of people in your country to this news story?
- 7) Is this story 'a little disproportionate'?
- 8) Surely the Royal couple should have known better than to party topless knowing there was no fence to shield their antics?
- 9) Should the Duke and Duchess in the future give France 'a wide berth' i.e. avoid the country?
- 10) Have you learnt anything in today's English lesson?

Student B questions

- 1) What do you think about what you read?
- 2) What would the Duke do if the Google Street View vehicle had driven down the road in the French countryside taking 360° photos that had caught the Duchess topless?
- 3) Does the average French woman simply 'pout her cheeks' at this story and say 'so what'?
- 4) Why are the British press not publishing these photos?
- 5) Have you seen the offending photos?
- 6) Should the royal party have had better security to stop the paparazzi taking these photos?
- 7) Is Prince William right to take the French magazine to court?
- 8) What would you do in this situation?
- 9) What lessons have been learnt from this situation?
- 10) Did you like this discussion?
