First New Grammar School to Open in England in 50 Years

Recently in the UK the Education Secretary Nicky Morgan announced the approval of the first new grammar school in England in 50 years. It is a breakthrough decision, as under socialism grammar schools were banned.

The new grammar school in Sevenoaks, Kent is officially an annex of the Weald of Kent Grammar School for girls that is based in Tonbridge, Kent 10 miles (16km) away. The new all girls grammar school will offer a mixed sixth form.

The legal precedent that has now been set is likely to open the floodgate to many other existing grammar schools. Demand from parents is likely to be sky high for places at the new grammar school. Property prices will increase!

The National Union of Teachers' general secretary, Christine Blower said the move was a step backwards for education. Many trendy left-wing teachers in schools today are still against them. Many parents however would say the exact opposite. It is a hot topic of debate.

In the mid-1970s, the socialists (Labour Party) forced the closure of thousands of grammar schools. Virtually every town once had its own grammar school or technical school, as well as secondary modern schools. The socialists created the comprehensive school for all abilities. In 1998, the socialists, under Tony Blair introduced a law forbidding new taxpayer-funded grammar schools.

London mayor Boris Johnson has described the decline of grammar schools a tragedy. Meanwhile the Prime Minister David Cameron is a fan of the new academy schools. Lastly, it will be very interesting to hear what the students think of this topic and whether the indoctrination of the current generation by the socialists has worked!
