

Melbourne tops most liveable city list 2011

The Australian city of Melbourne has edged out Canada's Vancouver to take the title of the world's most liveable city for the first time in almost a decade. The city's mayor Robert Doyle said he was "absolutely delighted" with the news. This year Vancouver fell to third place behind the Austrian city of Vienna. The Australian metropolis topped the Economist Intelligence Unit's global liveability survey of 140 cities. Australian cities featured prominently in the top ten, with Sydney ranked sixth and Perth and Adelaide in joint 8th place. Canadian cities also did well, with Toronto and Calgary holding fourth and fifth place respectively. The survey is conducted twice a year. Cities were scored on political and social stability, crime rates, access to quality health care, cultural events, the environment, education and the standard of infrastructure. Vancouver missed out on the top spot because its infrastructure had fallen due to periodic closures of a key motorway.

Jon Copestake the survey editor: "Australia, with a low population density and relatively low crime rates, continues to supply some of the world's most liveable cities." He added, "Despite the rising cost of living, driven by the strong Australian dollar, these cities offer a range of factors to make them highly attractive." Among other well-known cities, Paris came 16th, two places ahead of Tokyo. The top-ranked US city was Honolulu which came 26th, while London was a lowly 53rd just behind Singapore. The top Asian city was the Japanese city of Osaka, which came in 12th, tying with Geneva. The Greek capital Athens dropped five places to 67th due to recent government austerity measures. The Arab uprisings prompted a fall in liveability for affected cities in the Middle East. This was most pronounced in Tripoli, where the descent into civil war saw its ranking plummet from 107th to 135th. Scores in Europe have been pushed slightly down by the Eurozone crisis.

Cities were scored out of 100 and the report noted that the top 10 cities were only separated by 1.8 percentage points. Harare, Dhaka and Port Moresby, the capitals of Zimbabwe, Bangladesh and Papua New Guinea respectively were bottom of list as least liveable.
